The Coal Question!

Notice to our Customers

The price of coal will advance at the mines at least 50c. per ton at the rate of 10c. per month beginning May 1st next.

Both the United States and Canadian railways, notwithstanding the advanced freight of last year, have not been able to meet running expenses for months past.

The probabilities are that freight rates will be advanced in the near future still higher. Therefore there is no cheap coal in sight.

We urge our customers to lay in their next winter's supply at once before we have to advance prices.

Letter to the Editor

Nowhere, Notime, Nohow

Dear Express Job Print :—

In your issue of Sept. 5, under "The Cricket," you take objection to flying the U. S. flag side by each with the Canadian flag, saying "if the proprietor of that estimable place doesn't know that the flag of Britain's colony is generally flown over the foreign flag, perhaps he had better make inquiries and learn." You are in error old top, and I beg to set you right or nearly so, for I presume you or the office boy write the dope appearing under "the Cricket" and I hate to see you blunder. As you want the proprietor to make inquiries and learn. In advising the proprietor in question to make inquiries and learn, The Cricket shows his own ignorance, also his own cheek.

It is highly improper to fly one national flag above another. National flags flying from the same standard or building should fly from the same level, not one above the other. This established custom is well known by all residents of International law and by the public generally. The custom has been indorsed by the eminent English authority on International affairs, Sir E. Grey in his earlier papers and speeches, also by Wm. Hall, ex-President of the U. S., in his treatise on International law. Again old top, the very next time you dine at the yacht club in Toronto take a look behind the door of the main boathouse and there you will see many regulations regarding flags etc., and note where it states that the national flag of one nation should never be flown above the national flag of another nation. The next time you are in Paris, London, or Washington, take notice that the national flags on the "hang-outs" of the ambassadors in that neck of the woods are never one above the other.

Quote your authority next time, Mr. Cricket.

DEWART AND HEARST

To the editor of the Globe :

Letters have appeared in the press recently, also an editorial in the Christian Guardian, containing some unfavourable and unfair comment on the Liberal Leader, Mr. Hartley Dewart. As Dewart is well able to take care of himself, but coupled with these attacks on Mr. Dewart, are some comments regarding his supporters, which are nothing short of gratuitous insult to the electors of Ontario.

Being one of the delegates at the Liberal convention, who very heartily supported Mr. Dewart, I may say that my reason for so doing was this fact : Ontario requires at this time an able, virile, courageous, resolute man at the helm, a man who will fearlessly grapple with the questions that so seriously affect the masses of the people, such as the trusts, combines, and profiteers, and give a sane, square deal to the soldiers settling in Ontario, and also to see that the statutes of the Province are honestly and impartially enforced, which is not the case under the present premier.

I challenge any man who speaks for the premier, or any one interested with him to say that there has ever been an honest effort made to enforce the O. T. A. impartially. Mr. Dewat is a member of the Legislature with outstanding ability and possessing the essential qualities for leadership, and we have his pledged word that should he become the leader of the Government, the will of the people shall be vigorously and impartially carried into effect.

Premier Hearst is held up to the temperance electors by the writers of the letters referred to and by the Christian Guardian as the "star" which they should follow. I trust that the electors, Liberal or conservative, will be misled by this sophistry. Premier Hearst has more than one occasion shown himself to be a painted lath, a man with feet of clay. Have we forgotten what occurred in the Legislature in 1915, when the member for south Wellington, Mr. S. Carter, made repeated efforts to have the hours of liquor sale more than once reduced during which liquor might be sold ? The war was then raging and Canada had been at war for nearly 20 months. Efficiency and conservation were urgently needed. Did Premier Hearst, (a member of this Government) have the courage of his convictions and take a stand for the curtailment of the liquor traffic ? Not in the place where it should be done, in the Legislature and champion the prohibition cause ? Did he do so much as use his voice or the finger to lessen the ravages of the liquor traffic ? No. Mr. Hearst at that critical time when the test was applied was not in the seat of the scornful. He sat with those who mocked and jeered at the efforts of the member for south Wellington. Where then was Premier Hearst's vaunted courage and from whence came his so-called courage in 1916 ? The answer to that is simple. A petition praying for prohibition had been signed in the meantime by about 75 per cent of the electors of Ontario, and Premier Hearst had the remarkable courage to decide that it was safer, politically, (at least for a time) to forsake the 25 per cent—his former friends—and associate himself and his Government with the 75 per cent of the electors.

A few months later the Premier again revealed himself in his true colors leading the faithful in devious ways and paths. A by-election was held in north Toronto. The conservative candidate, Mr. James Norris, declared himself in favor of beer and wine licenses for Ontario and Premier Hearst the leader, whom the Christian Guardian, forsooth, would have us believe is faithful Joe, stumped Mr. Norris as Government candidate, thereby implying that Mr. Norris was a good enough temperance man for them. Also two members of the Hearst Government virtually promised the electors of southeast Toronto beer and wine licenses for Ontario if they would give Mr. Norris three four or five thousand of a majority. The Premier and his Government have been playing a double game with the O. T. A. since that time, watching the election returns to see on which side of the fence the majority was to be found.

Having personal knowledge of how the C. T. A. B. is being administered in all parts of the Province, I would be doing violence to my conscience and duty were I myself if I supported the group of thimble-tricker politicians now in control in Queen's park.

ODESSA

The banquet given last Thursday night for the returned boys have recently returned from overseas was indeed a great credit to those interested. The hall was crowded and an excellent program was given, consisting of violin solos by Miss Ruth Babcock, Parker, instrumental selections by Miss Laura Crowe, Ernestown, and Miss Warren, of Carleton Place, and two vocal solos by William Caton. The presentation of eighteen handsome signet rings was made by Rev. Mr. McTear, Bath, and an eloquent address followed, after which the young people took advantage of a dance. The music was furnished by the Lawlor Bros, with Miss Crawl as piano accompanist.

Master Harold Hamm spent the week-end with his grand-parents, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Hamm.

Miss Grace Sharp is with Mrs. S. J. Sproule.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Smith have returned from spending the past month in the far west, visiting friends in Alberta and Saskatchewan.

LIBERAL CONVENTION

Held in Town Hall on Wednesday Evening.

Mr. W. R. Lott, President of the Association, opened the meeting announcing that Mr. Carleton Woods, the nominee at the bye-election, had tendered his resignation in order to leave the meeting free to choose another candidate, if such action was deemed best.

Nominations were called for and and one name was mentioned, that of Mr. Carleton Woods. Mr. Woods was called to the platform and in a short address accepted the unanimous nomination of the meeting. Mr. Woods has had five years municipal experience, and is a manufacturer, doing business exclusively with the farming community. Mr. Woods stated his intention of supporting the platform laid down at the recent convention in Toronto.

Mr. Jos. L. Haycock addressed the meeting for a short time. He made it clear to the meeting that he would sooner support an independent farmer, but the farmers of Lennox were not sufficiently organized to place a candidate in the field. He urged some attention to the Union Government at Otawa and the camoflage used to cover the sins of the former tory government. As to Mr. Rowell, he said he had heard him compared to Judas. He thought it was very unfair (to Judas). Respecting Mr. Hearst, he stated that Mr. Hearst was not nominated by the people of Ontario but by the politicians at Ottawa. Like a watch or a house, a cleaning is necessary once in a while, and he was of the opinion that it was time for a house cleaning at Toronto. Of Mr. Woods he knew very little, but what he did know was that he was perfectly upright and honest and will make a worthy representative of the County of Lennox. As to Mr. Hearst's stand on the Referendum Act, he had stated that he will personaly vote temperance, but his control of his government is so slight that he is not a fit man to lead any party, and dare not make a pronouncement which will bind the party to action on the referendum issue.

Major J. E. Tolmie, member for Windsor, congratulated Mr. Woods in handing the nomination given him three years ago back to the meeting in view of the great change in the electorate since his first nomination, and congratulated him on again being the unanimous choice of the convention. He twitted Premier Hearst on his indecision in announcing the date of the election. Surely the premier knows whether or not there will be an election, and it shows very little decision on his part not to announce whether there will be an election or not.

Mr. Hearst says his government is going to the country on its record and the Liberals were going before the people on promises of what they will do. Is it true the Liberal party is going to the country on promises, and those promises were thrown down at the Liberal Convention in Toronto which was representative of all the people. The outstanding question of the present campaign is the temperance question, and Major Tolmie compared the record of the two parties on this question during the past few years showing that the Liberals have been the real leaders on this question. Mr. Dewart has publicly announced his public policy on this question which is the temperance policy as adopted by the Toronto convention. Most of the recent beneficial legislation at Toronto was first brought up in the house by the liberal members and when the movement became popular were adopted by the government and enacted. Mr. Tolmie critized the educational policy of the government. Education now has too many frills and too little real practical knowledge.

Mr. Tolmie advocated advanced social legislation, including widow's pensions, decent and adequate pensions for returned soldiers, equal whether private or officer, paying provisions for soldier settlement in old Ontario, instead of sending them to New Ontario, where they will be away from home and friends.

Mr. Nelson Parliament, M.P.P. for Prince Edward, congratulated the meeting on the selection of Mr. Woods as the candidate in the coming election. Mr. Parliament also congratulated the ladies present on the attainment of the franchise. He strongly critized the inaction of the present government in agricultural matters, and placed before the meeting the measures advocated by the Liberal party in aid of agriculture.

The meeting closed with three cheers for the candidate, the speakers and the Liberal party.

A Ready Wit.

The late Sir John Mahaffey, provost of Trinity College, Dublin, was noted more for his wit than for his learning. There is a story about the Kaiser and him. At a reception in London he was conversing with the Count of Spain, the Princess Ena, then newly married. He asked her how she was getting on with her husband, and fell into a eulogy of the language, quoting Charles V. as saying that he "spoke Spanish to his God, Italian to his wife and German to his servants and dogs." The Kaiser heard the queen's laughter, and crossed the room, asked what the joke was. "Sir," said the Irish wit, "I have known her majesty only ten minutes, and already we have something to conceal."

Sounded Like It.

Redd—I'm going to move to-morrow and my partner's going to move next week.

Greene—What are you doing? Playing a game of chess?

TOWN COUNCIL MEETING

Council Chamber,
September 15th, 1919

Council met in regular session on Monday evening. Mayor J. E. Robinson, presiding.

Present—Reeve Graham and councillors Boyes, MacGregor and Steacy.

The minutes of the last regular session were read and confirmed.

A communication was read from W. G. Wilson on behalf of his client, Mr. B. S. Vanalstine, claiming damages to his building by reason of blasting in the Napanee quarries. Referred to street committee to investigate and report.

A communication was read from the Belleville Creamery Co., complaining that the assessment on their Creamery at Napanee was too high. The present assessment was $4, 800. Referred to Finance committee to report.

Messrs F. E. Vanluven, John Walsh and James Reid appeared before the council complaining that they are very much in need of water. There is a two inch water main running past their residences, but for the past three years they have been unable to get any water owing to a stoppage in the pipe. They suggested that the council ask the Waterworks Co. to lay a water main in this street.

Moved by Reeve Graham, seconded by Councillor Boyes that the prayer of the petitioners be granted and that the Waterworks Co. be notified to extend the water main on John street 600 feet northerly and that a hydrant be placed at the end of the said proposed extension. Carried.

Mr. Walter Metcalf appeared before the council and asked why a dog owned by Mr. E. Hall had not been destroyed after the Mayor and Chief of Police had been notified. The said dog had bitten Mr. Metcalf's little girl severely on the chin and he wanted to know why no action had been taken.

Mr. Metcalf was given to understand that the Mayor and clerk would take the necessary action in the matter.

Mr. Frank Ford appeared before the council seeking information as to what the law is intended to in reference to a walk leading to his premises.

The streets committee will look into the matter and report to the council.

Dr. Wilson notified the council of a severe case of diphtheria in North Fredericksburgh Tp., just south of the town, and advised that quick action be taken immediately.

The council immediately got into touch with Dr. Maloney, the Provincial Officer of Health, in order that proper precaution be taken.

The Fire, Water and Light committee reported on the request of Mr. Midmer for an extension of the water mains on Dundas street from Union street westerly to the town limits. The committee recognized the necessity of this extension, but owing to the lateness of the season, they suggested the leaving of this matter over until next year when it should be taken up at the proper time. Report adopted.

On motion the Mayor and Reeve were appointed a delegation to go to Toronto to interview the Fire Underwriters Association re increase of insurance rates in Napanee.

On motion the Curling Club were granted a rebate of $62.00 on their assessment, the rebate being granted on the same basis as last year.

HOME-MADE ELECTRICITY.

How a Farmer May Utilize a Little River.

Why not more electricity for our farmers?

Easy to get, and mighty cheap, if there be on the farm even a tiny stream.

There are scattered throughout the country innumerable brooks and streamlets capable of supplying enough electric power for all farm and domestic needs.

A brook ten feet wide, with an average depth of two feet and flowing two feet per second under a "head" of ten feet, can supply ten horsepower continuously—enough to light the average farmstead and leave enough over to operate motors for many of the needs of power on the farm.

Electricity on the farm is as helpful to the farmer's wife as to the farmer. It may be so utilized as to relieve her of much drudgery.

The first thing for the farmer with a brook at hand to consider is how much power he requires—the unit of electrical power being the "watt." One horse-power is the equivalent of 746 watts.

To run a twelve-inch electric fan requires forty watts; a toaster, 400 watts; a four-plate disk heater, 450 watts; a coffee percolator, 500 watts; a small hot-water heater, 1,500 watts. Lights consume ordinarily twenty-five or forty watts.

To run a churn takes half a horse-power, a cream separator the same, a milking machine the same, an ice cream freezer the same, a washing machine the same, a grindstone half that much, a washer three horse-power, a buzz saw three the same, a feed grinder five horse-power.

Even an insignificant streamlet may supply all the current needed on a farm, for lighting if for no other purpose, when properly harnessed. With storage batteries provided to store up its energy throughout the twenty-four hours in loading them—the power to be drawn off during only a few hours each day.

Hydro-electric outfits suitable for farm use are inexpensive, and their upkeep costs almost nothing.

Prairie Provinces and Poultry.

From March 1 to May 24 inclusive nearly 1,000,000 dozen eggs were exported from Canada. What is most significant is that four cars of these eggs went direct from the Prairie Provinces, and there is no doubt that more of the total exports were represented by stocks bought in the west, but sent abroad through eastern agencies.

The growth in the poultry industry of the west has been one of the most significant developments of recent years, but evidently the movement has not yet penetrated as far as it can, as eggs were recently retailing in Vancouver at 70c. per dozen.

ITALY NOW HAS FIUME

Disputed Area Seized by Band of "Patriots."

Gabriele D'Annunzio, the Poet, Was the Leader of the Coup, Which May Have Serious Consequences —Premier Nitti Has Characterized the Action of the Army In Making Raid as Sedition.

ROME, Sept. 16.—Gabriele D'Annunzio, former aviator in the Italian naval air service, has arrived at Fiume at the head of armed bands of men, it was officially announced here Sunday. D'Annunzio secretly joined the volunteers, among whom is "Peppino" Garibaldi.

Premier Nitti received news of the entry of D'Annunzio and the Italian volunteers into Fiume, while the Chamber of Deputies was engaged in debate. He was astounded, and the Majority Deputies expressed their regret that such an incident had occurred.

Premier Nitti, announced that the commander of the sixth army corps had been ordered to intercept and disarm Gabriele D'Annunzio's troops, but these troops refused to obey the commander's order.

The latest advices were to the effect that the situation arising from the coup was serious, and the Premier declared he was determined to act in a manner to avoid grave conflicts. He deplored what had happened, because for the first time sedition, though for idealistic aims, had entered the Italian army.

The Epoca announces that Gen. Badoglio, deputy chief of staff, has gone to Fiume armed with full powers.

D'Annunzio, according to some reports, entered the city of Fiume at the head of from 8,000 to 12,000 men.

In the course of his speech Signor Nitti gave full details of the report of the military authorities at Fiume, showing that D'Annunzio's troops had overcome all resistance and entered the city, and that the War Minister's order to disarm and return them to the armistice line was not carried out because, as Gen. Robilant reported to the Minister, "the detail to carry out the order had failed him."

News received Saturday showed that D'Annunzio's troops, described as numbering 2,300, were still in Fiume, and that the poet had announced that he intended to install himself in the Army Command Bureau.

Signor Nitti expressed strong deprecation of what he termed the misguided deed of D'Annunzio, because, he said, it would propagate the belief abroad of the violent Imperialistic spirit of the Italian people and result in Italian aspirations in the Adriatic being met with strong opposition. "No worse service would be rendered to the cause we are defending and have defended," he said.

Signor Nitti flatly denied that the Government tolerated such incidents as the occupation of Fiume, and characterized as "lunatics betraying the cause of the Fatherland" those who advocated protests and "mad acts" against France and the United States.

The Premier concluded his address with a strong appeal for the troops to return to their posts

RHINE AREA PROSPERS.

Tommy Atkins Popular With the German Children.

COLOGNE, Germany, Sept. 16.—British forces on the Rhine are diminishing daily, and it is fair to say they will leave behind them an excellent impression. Isolated disturbances have occurred, but it would be wrong to form a general impression from these. A surprising feature, indeed, has been their rarity, in view of the fact that we are occupying German territory, and an intense feeling of disgust had been aroused among British soldiers by Germany's loathsome methods in waging war.

The people in Rhineland feel that they owe the British a debt of gratitude, because not only has British occupation brought with it relaxation of German official domination, but has also meant increased prosperity. Signs of this are visible everywhere in the Rhineland. Cafes, shops, etc., are full; even exorbitant prices are not acting as a deterrent.

British troops have parted freely with their money, and German tradesmen have not been slow to take advantage of this characteristic.

"Tommy" has also left behind him the best of memories among the Germans. Particularly the German children will remember his many acts of spontaneous kindness and the chivalry of his demeanor and conduct will be an indelible memory for the German fraulein.

BUILDING THE NATION.

Industrial Conference Convened at Ottawa Meetings.

OTTAWA, Sept. 16.—Considering fundamental measures for the betterment of relations between capital and labor, Canada's National Industrial Conference assembled here Monday in the Senate Chamber, and entered upon the consideration of the extensive agenda. There are about two hundred delegates who represent organized industry, organized labor, the Federal and Provincial Governments along with a third group representing various interests including the consumers. The conference arises out of the report last spring of the Commission on Industrial Relations which, in the cause of its conclusions found that the enactment of legislation to give effect to its recommendations did not be wholly within the power of the Federal Parliament and to secure concerted action. At a conference with the provinces and with representations of capital and labor, concerted action was suggested to unify and co-ordinate legislation present and prospective.

The Senate Chamber was filled to overflowing when the conference assembled. Representatives of the manufacturing interests sat on the left and those of labor on the right. Cabinet Ministers present included Hons. A. W. Rowell, A. L. Sifton, G. D. Robertson. The provincial ministerial delegation were not all in attendance, and will arrive later. Those present are Sir William Hearst and Hon. Finlay Macdiarmid, of Ontario, and Hon. J. W. Ferris, of British Columbia.

Hon. G. D. Robertson, the Minister of Labor, opened the conference with a suggestion that all should sing the National Anthem, which was done. Senator Robertson expressed regret at the absence of the Prime Minister, Sir Robert Borden. Sir Robert Borden was extremely anxious to be present because of his interest in the questions to be discussed. He had, however, sent a message to the conference which Mr. McGrath read.

The keynote of Premier Borden's message is contained in the following paragraph:

"In common with every nation in the world, the Canadian people are confronted with new and untried conditions surrounded with difficulties not less grave and complex than those which we encountered at the outbreak of war and during its continuance. Canada, in the extent and variety of her resources and in the spirit of self-reliance and initiative of her people, is more thoroughly equipped for meeting these difficulties than most nations. The first great essential is to keep constantly in our minds a thorough realization of actual conditions and of the needs by which they are attended. No passion and not less vital essential is to bring to bear upon the problems of peace, the unity of purpose and energy, the persistence and determination, in short, the national spirit, which maintained our effort throughout the war."

Hon. Mr. Robertson suggested that as the House of Commons is in session the Minister could not attend the conference personally. He therefore called upon Hon. Mr. Rowell for an address.

Hon. N. W. Rowell looked upon the conference as a Canadian peace conference, as the most vital question before the public to-day. It would be judged by results.

Hon. Mackenzie King said he was heartily in favor of the conference, and had acted on the proposed program with interest and approval. The most important thing of all was the spirit in which this conference would be approached. The first word of the name of the conference—National—raised the questions to be discussed above and away from the realm of partisan politics.

FIRM HAND IN IRELAND.

Government Takes Action to Suppress Sinn Fein.

BELFAST, Sept. 16. — The Sinn Fein raids carried out Monday morning to find itself suppressed throughout Ireland. "Should have happened five years ago," is the comment heard here. The Dail Eireann or Sinn Fein Parliament has also been suppressed, and the headquarters at Harcourt street, Dublin, were raided by the police. Large quantities of documents were seized last Friday, and extensive police raids were made in Galway, Tipperary, Limerick, Waterford, Belfast, Derry, Cork, Dublin, Waterford, Youghal, Kilkenny, Dundalk, Lizehok, Wicklow, Athlone, Omagh, Newry, Warrenpoint, Banbridge and of other towns and villages, with seizure of arms and explosives. Patrick McKeon, M.P., and the general secretary of the Sinn Fein Executive, Blythe, M. P., were arrested in Dublin.

The Sinn Fein answer to the raids was not long delayed. Detective Daniel Hoey was shot dead on Townsend street, Dublin, a few yards from the police executive office. This relets hi him. The murderer escaped, although there were many people in the street at the time.

In Dublin a quantity of gelignite was seized, and there also Patrick Sheals was arrested with two loaded revolvers. The latter case, which he attempted to use before the police, was frustrated.

Before he was safely in custody the police had to resort to rescuing crowd and dispersing them.

The bold stroke by the Government is strongly approved by the Irish loyalists, who now begin to feel that there is a Government in the country. Lord French's Belfast speech initiated the present action, which is being put into effect. Nearly fifty policemen have been killed or wounded in Ireland during this year, but so far on one has been made amenable.

No Further Gratuities Will be Paid Veterans.

Finances of Canada Will Not Permit the Further Grant of $2,000 Each to the Returned Men Who Fought Overseas—Federal Cabinet Refuses to Be Coerced Into Position Against Welfare of Nation.

OTTAWA, Sept. 16.—Members of the Returned Soldiers' Gratuity League of Toronto who were here Saturday asking for a grant of $2,000 for veterans of the great war were turned down by the Government.

Hon. C. J. Doherty told them that the country could not raise the amount they were demanding, adding that it was useless for them to continue their agitation, as the Government had made up its mind and did not intend to recede from its position.

"And the Government cannot be intimidated," declared the Minister of Justice emphatically.

The deputation arrived by the morning train from Toronto, and immediately got in touch with the Prime Minister. Sir Robert Borden was confined to his house with the grippe and could not see them, but advised them to see members of the Cabinet. Accordingly they proceeded to the East Block and were received in the Privy Council chamber Saturday afternoon by Judge Doherty, Hon. Arthur Meighen and other members of the Cabinet. The spokesmen on behalf of the veterans were Messrs. J. H. Flynn, president of the League, and Harry Rose, W. P. Gordon, H. Ainsworth and Gearns-Batchelor.

In reply to their demands Judge Doherty told them a special committee of Parliament would be appointed in a day or two to deal with a bill to be introduced respecting the civil re-establishment of soldiers, and the families of men who were killed in action or died of wounds.

Major D. L. Redman, M.P. for Calgary East, is going to withdraw his motion for the appointment of a royal commission. He is satisfied with the action taken by the Government on Friday, when announcement was made by Mr. Rowell that a special committee would be appointed at once.

Legislation affecting the Department of Soldiers' Re-establishment will come before the House during the week and this will offer opportunity for a Parliamentary discussion of the difficulties which beset the problems of citizens who, having served in the forces, have since been discharged. In connection the expression "investigation" has been used, an expression liable to cause a misapprehension. There is no question of investigation regarding the activities of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. The bill which will be introduced is a formal, but necessary one. While it is highly probable that the question of increased gratuities will be brought up on this occasion, the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment does not deal with gratuities because the men do not come under its jurisdiction until after discharge. The Department is responsible for medical treatment, the supply of artificial limbs, vocational training of the disabled and of the minor, personal services to those undergoing treatment or training, and placement in touch with opportunities for employment.

All of these services are placed at the disposal of the ex-members of the forces without charge. Those who require lengthy medical treatment and those who are undergoing industrial training are provided with adequate pay and allowances while being treated or retrained. The male staff of the department saw service in the Canadian Expeditionary Force to the extent of 92.5 per cent. of its total strength.

President In Danger.

SEATTLE, Wash., Sept. 16.—President and Mrs. Wilson narrowly escaped disaster at the review of the Pacific fleet here Saturday.

The power gig of the battleship Oregon, in which the President and Mrs. Wilson were riding, was in collision with another navy launch just as it was leaving the landing stage at the navy pier for the Oregon, from which the President and Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, reviewed the fleet.

There was a sharp shock as the two craft came together, and the President's launch tipped sharply as it veered away.

Both the President and Mrs. Wilson maintained their composure and there apparently was little danger, although Commander D. W. Foote, naval aide to Secretary Daniels, declared that overcrowding of the launch had endangered the President's life.

CATTLE MARKETS

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, Sept. 16.—With 6000 cattle on sale, the market was steady on most grades. If there was any decline, it was shown on the common, lightweight steers and heifers, and the common and medium butcher cows and the ordinary bulls.

The prospects are at least steady for good butchers, heavyweight, finished steers, and especially for good butcher heifers; in fact, any good cattle will bring satisfactory prices.

With 5224 sheep and lambs on sale, the market, in sympathy with Buffalo and other American centres, was off a good deal, $1 per cwt., the bulk of the sales going at around 14c to 14¼c, and choice lots at the 14½c, and something extra choice at 14¾c, the latter, of course, the exception. Sheep held fairly steady.

The run of calves was 422, choice veal holding steady, but the heavy grass calves were easier and slow of sale.

With 1830 hogs on the market, there was no change in prices—Receipts fed, 17¾ f.o.b., and 17c to the farmer. For Tuesday's loading the packers are quoting 18c lower, or 18¼c fed and watered, 17¼ f.o.b., and 17c straight to the farmer, another clear cut of 50c per cwt.

WINNIPEG LIVE STOCK.

Winnipeg, Sept. 16.—Receipts 190 cattle, 128 calves, 87 hogs and 99 sheep. Butcher steers, $6.75 to $11.25; heifers, $6.50 to $10.50; cows, $4 to $9; bulls, $4.50 to $6.25; calves, $4.50 to $5.50; stockers, $5 to $7.50; feeders, $5.50 to $9.25; hogs, $5 to $11; sheep, $6 to $9; lambs, $8 to $12.

Hogs—Selected, $18; heavies, $15 to $16; sows, $12 to $14; stags, $8 to $10; lights, $16.50 to $17.

EAST BUFFALO LIVE STOCK.

East Buffalo, N.Y., Sept. 15.—Cattle—Receipts, 5,800; slow, good steady, others 25c to 50c lower; prime steers $17 to $17.50; shipping steers, $16 to $16.75; butchers, $15.50 to $15.75; yearlings, $8 to $16; heifers, $7 to $13; cows, $4 to $12; bulls, $4 to $10.50; stockers and feeders, $6 to $10.50; fresh cows and springers, $65 to $170.

Thanksgiving Day Named.

OTTAWA, Sept. 16.—Monday, October 13, will be observed as Thanksgiving Day in Canada this year. That announcement was made officially by the Federal authorities Monday. The proposal that has come from some quarters to observe the Monday nearest to Armistice Day (November 11) was not considered. An October holiday is, on the whole, to be preferred in Canada, and the weather is likely to be brighter and warmer.

English Idioms.

The why and wherefore of English idioms and old expressions which are so familiar to us that they no longer seem strange, must be a source of some perplexity to the foreigner learning the language. For instance, how should he know that when he wishes to say someone has started on the wrong end and given it up before seeing it through, he can say that the man "threw up the sponge"? The phrase had its origin in the prize-fighters' ring. In former times, when a prize-fighter was badly injured in the first round, he often threw up the sponge edged to him in the second, or, in a sudden fit, threw it up in the air, thus declaring that he had had enough of it.

Again, one time many years ago the sleeves of all outer garments were very wide. Hence, when a person covered his face with his hand, the suspicion always arose that he was laughing at someone else's discomfiture. That is why, when we are inwardly amused at another, we say we laugh in our sleeve.

A primitive way for a man to commit suicide was to tie the end of a rope around a beam or branch of a tree and the other around his neck, standing all the time on a bucket. By kicking the bucket away he would hang himself. Hence, a slang expression for "to die" is to "kick the bucket."

It used to be customary for the godfather of an infant to present him with a silver spoon at baptism. In the case of a child born lucky or rich, the gift was anticipated at the moment of entering life and the child was then said to be born with a silver spoon in his mouth.

Children are often much interested in the fact that puppies and kittens do not open their eyes for nine days after birth. They watch them with wonder until the little fellows develop eyesight equal to the old pets of the children's acquaintance. So a sensational event or a piece of public scandal which arouses uncommon interest for a few days and then gradually subsides is called a nine days' wonder.

When a tent is being put up it is necessary to secure its rope to the ground on all sides by pegs before the work can be left, lest the whole structure, caught by the wind, should be blown down. Hence the camping phrase, "peg away," arose. Now, whenever we see someone working hard in order to finish his job immediately, we say to him, "Peg away."

In olden times, when bread was purchased in the open market instead of in shops, the women took up the selling from door to door. They received from the bakers 13 loaves for the price of 12, the thirteenth loaf constituting their profit or commission. Hence came the term, "baker's dozen."

Pensions.

Compared with the annual pensions granted by the Overseas Dominions and other countries to their totally disabled married soldiers, those paid by Great Britain cannot be said to err on the side of generosity.

From the following table, which gives the respective pensions at a glance, it will be seen that the United Kingdom comes fifth on the list.

New Zealand pays each totally disabled married soldier £156, and £26 for each child under sixteen.

Canada—£145 and £20 for each child under seventeen.

Australia—£117 and £26 for the first child and £13 for others under sixteen.

United States—£112 10s., and £25 for each child up to three under eighteen.

United Kingdom — £71 10s. (plus 30 per cent. bonus for period from November, 1918, to June, 1919), and £17 10s. for the first child to £10 10s. for others under sixteen.

Germany—£36 to £65, which, from January, 1919, has been increased from 50 to 100 per cent., owing to the higher cost of living.

Italy—£62, and £5 10s. for each child under twelve.

France—£48 and £4 for each child. This, however, is being increased.

STORY OF BIG STRIKE

MOST UNIQUE STRUGGLE IN HISTORY OF CANADA.

Extreme Labor Forces Endeavor to Control City of Winnipeg and for Six Weeks the Conflict Between Workers and Constituted Authority Was Carried On—Methodist Clergyman Acted as Leader of Men.

HERE are the outstanding developments of the most remarkable strike in the history of Canada, which ended in Winnipeg on June 26th:—

May 1.—Men in the building trades strike.

May 2.—Metal trades workers strike.

May 9.—Trades and Labor Council order all unions to take a strike vote, returnable Tuesday May 13.

May 13.—General strike called to take effect Thursday, May 15, at 11 a.m.

May 15.—General walkout. All big utilities affected. Street carmen, postal employes, firemen, civic employes, delivery shopmen and members of practically all the smaller unions affiliated with the Trades and Labor Council quit work. Police did not go out on order of the Strike Committee, and the Typographical Union refused to even take strike vote.

May 16.—Webb pressmen and stereotypers go out, tying up all daily newspapers.

May 17.—Telegraphers quit, isolating Winnipeg from the outside world. Papers cut off; mails cut off; wires cut off.

May 19.—"Permission Cards" issued by the Strike Committee rouse a storm of protest. Cards disappear in few days.

May 20.—Free Press appears "Without Permission of the Strike Committee" with a two-page issue, which is increased to eight pages on following day.

May 24.—Federal Government sends ultimatum to postal employes and Provincial Government to telephone employes that they must return to work by noon on May 26th or be dismissed.

May 26.—Volunteer service in post, telephone, telegraphers decide to stay out. General strikers at Calgary and Edmonton begin.

May 27 — Council declares against sympathetic strike affecting the civic departments. All employes dismissed for violating contracts. Big mail posts as postal clerks. Premier Norris declines to negotiate for settlement of the original cause of the dispute until the sympathetic strike is declared off. Many telephone employes back at country points. Kennedy, one of the rebel Winnipeg leaders, opposes sympathetic strike.

May 28.—Strike starts at Brandon. Provincial civil servants also go out at midnight. Toronto strike postponed till Friday. Railway brotherhoods offer to act as mediators. Premier Norris refuses to meet the employes' committee.

May 29.—Mayor Gray declares against sympathetic strike affecting the civic departments. All employes dismissed for violating contracts,

Mr. Wisman is finding his large garage already too small to accommodate his ever growing business.

Presentation and Address.

A number of friends and neighbors gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Anson McKeown, Centreville, on the evening of Sept. 8th, to spend a social evening with them before their departure to their new home in Newburgh. After a pleasant evening was spent in games and music, refreshments were served and the following address was read by Miss Hazel Milligan :

Mr. and Mrs. Anson McKeown :

A great writer has said, "It is a good thing to be rich, a good thing to be strong, but it is a better thing to be beloved of many friends." Judging by the numbers here to-night you possess that "better thing."

And in this age people do not gain much without working for it, or being worthy of it, and it is also written, "He that would have friends must show himself to be friendly." You have done this ; you have only been with us a short time, but the word has gone out, "they are good neighbors," and this is high praise, for it speaks of sympathy, unselfishness and kindly manners.

We rejoice that since coming among us you have identified yourselves with the church and its work, and we know that wherever you go you will find in that service an ever increasing joy, and a foundation for true friendship.

Will you, Mr. McKeown, accept this chair, and Mrs. McKeown, this silverware as an indication of the esteem in which your Centreville friends hold you, and be assured that our best wishes go with you and your boys.

Signed on behalf of the community,

HAZEL MILLIGAN,
EMMA MILLIGAN,
JENNIE BROWN.

REFORMS IN BURMA.

Preparations Are Being Made For Responsible Government.

Any study of the reform proposals recently put forward by the Burma Government must lead to the conviction that, however much one may disagree with specific proposals, or the way in which specific issues have been settled, the general effect of the scheme is to carry out in Burma the policy announced by Mr. Montagu for the whole of India in his famous speech in the British House of Commons on August 20, 1917. In this speech, it will be remembered, Mr. Montagu made the momentous announcement that responsible government for India was the definite aim of the British authorities, and that it was the intention of the Government to set about the achievement of this aim at the earliest possible moment.

The proposals of the Burma Government are in full accord with the spirit of this statement. They make a practical beginning, and a very effective practical beginning, providing for virtually complete self-government, where it can be exercised at once, with the least possible risk of untoward consequences to the community as a whole, namely, in simple local matters; whilst associating the Burmans in the government of the country right up to the highest and most responsible positions. It is, however, in the opportunity which the proposals afford him for the management of his own local affairs that the Burman will surely find the scheme of the highest value. What the people of Burma, like the people of India, most need is some measure of political training, and some opportunity for securing it. No better school could be provided for this than the local parliament, in which each member has such a direct and immediate interest, and in which the criticism of the electorate is able to make itself so quickly felt.

Such a school, in its first grade, is certainly supplied under the scheme in the circle board, to which each village is to send one elected member; and, in its second grade, in the district council. This council will consist of elected members of the circle boards, who will be solely responsible for such important functions as raising local revenue as well as incurring expenditure, whilst they are to have complete jurisdiction in the district allotted to them. From these district councils, moreover, the official is to be entirely absent, and, as the Government statement justly points out, this means that such control as is necessary must be exercised from without and not from within. In the towns, the situation is to be met along the same lines by applying the Municipal Act to all urban areas of sufficient size. Finally, if the urban councils or the district councils get into difficulties, provision is made under the scheme whereby assistance can be rendered them, from time to time, by the loan of Government officers as experts.

The whole plan gives evidence of the most careful thought, and perhaps its greatest recommendation is its courageous recognition of the fact that it is better to run the risk of mistakes being made by the people in their efforts to govern themselves than to safeguard the people against mistakes at the expense of their political education.

MORRISON—COWAN

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at eight o'clock in the morning on Thursday of last week, at the home of Dr. and Mrs. G. H. Cowan, when their eldest daughter, Miss Kathleen, became the bride of Rev. H. Floyd Morrison, of Aylmer, Que., Rev. Dr. Shorey, pastor of Trinity church, performing the ceremony, assisted by Rev. J. A. Waddell, Kingston, in the presence of the immediate relatives of the contracting parties. Miss Carrie Cowan, sister of the bride, acted as bridesmaid, while George Morrison, New York, assisted the groom.

The bride looked charming in her gown of white charmeuse and georgette crepe, with veil embroidered in pearls and carried a sheaf of bridal roses. Miss Carrie Cowan wore maize taffeta and Brussels net and carried a sheaf of pale pink carnations. Mrs. Dr. Cowan was gowned in gray silk and georgette. The bride was given away by her father, Dr. G. H. Cowan. Little Miss Gertrude Davern acted as flower girl and wore a dainty dress of pink organdie. Miss Pearl Nesbitt, Kingston, played the wedding march and sang very sweetly after the ceremony.

A dainty wedding breakfast was served after the ceremony and the newly wedded couple motored to Kingston en route for New York and other points before finally making their home in Aylmer, Que.

Among the out-of-town guests were L. E. Percy, Brantford ; Rev. J. A. and Mrs. Waddell, Kingston ; Mr. and Mrs. Wells, Princeton ; Miss Hamilton, Princeton ; and Harold Cowan, Toronto.

"It is true, excellency."

"Shown a diagram of the palace, could you locate this door?"

Old Adelbert stared around him hopelessly. It was done now. Nothing that he could say or refuse to say would change that. He nodded.

When, soon after, a chart of the palace was placed on the table, he in-

"It is There," He Said Thickly.

dicated the location of the door with a trembling forefinger. "It is there," he said thickly. "And may God forgive me for the thing I have done!"

CHAPTER XV.

King Karl.

"They love us dearly!" said King Karl.

The chancellor, who sat beside him in the royal carriage, shrugged his shoulders. "They have had little reason to love, in the past, majesty," he said briefly.

Karl laughed, and watched the crowd. He and the chancellor rode alone, Karl's entourage, a very modest one, following in another carriage. There was no military escort, no pomp. It had been felt unwise. Karl, paying ostensibly a visit of sympathy, had come unofficially.

The chancellor was not so calm as he appeared. He had lined the route from the station to the palace with his men; had prepared for every contingency so far as he could without calling out the guard. As the carriage, drawn by its four chestnut horses, moved slowly along the streets, his eyes under their overhanging thatch were watching ahead, searching the crowd for symptoms of unrest.

Anger he saw in plenty, and suspicion. Scowling faces and frowning brows. But as yet there was no disorder. He sat with folded arms, magnificent in his uniform beside Karl, who wore civilian dress and looked less royal than perhaps he felt.

And Karl, too, watched the crowd, feeling its temper and feigning an indifference he did not feel. Olga Loschek had been right. He did not want trouble. More than that, he was of an age now to crave popularity. Many of the measures which had made him beloved in his own land had no higher purpose than this, the smiles of the crowd. So he watched and talked of indifferent things.

"It is ten years since I have been here," he observed, "but there are few changes."

"We have built no great buildings," said Mettlich bluntly. "Wars have left us no money, majesty, for building!"

That being a closed road, so to speak, Karl tried another. "The crown prince must be quite a lad," he experimented. "He was a babe in arms, then, but frail, I thought."

"He is sturdy now." The chancellor relapsed into watchfulness.

"Before I see the Princess Hedwig," Karl made another attempt, "it might be well to tell me how she feels about things. I would like to feel that the prospect is at least not disagreeable to her."

The chancellor was not listening. There was trouble ahead. It had come, then, after all. He muttered something behind his gray mustache. The horses stopped, as the crowd suddenly closed in front of them.

"Drive on!" he said angrily, and the coachman touched his whip to the horses. But they only reared, to be grasped at the bridles by hostile hands ahead.

Karl half rose from his seat.

"Sit still, majesty," said the chancellor. "It is the students. They will talk, that is all."

But it came perilously near to being a riot. Led by some students, pushed by others, the crowd surrounded the two carriages, first muttering, then yelling. A stone was hurled, and struck one of the horses. Another dented the body of the carriage itself. A man with a handkerchief tied over the lower half of his face mounted the shoulders of two companions, and harangued the crowd. They wanted no friendship with Karonia. Were they to lose their national existence? He exhorted them madly through the handkerchief. A babel of noise, of swinging back and forth, of mounted police pushing through to surround the carriage, of cries and the dominating voices of the student demagogues. Then at last a semblance of order, low muttering, an escort of police with drawn revolvers around the carriage, and it moved ahead.

Through it all the chancellor had sat with folded arms. Only his livid face told of his fury. Karl, too, had sat impassive, picking at his small mustache. But, as the carriage moved on, he said: "A few months ago I observed that there had been few changes. But there has been, I perceive, after all, a great change."

"One cannot judge the many by the few, majesty!"

But Karl only raised his eyebrows.

In his rooms, removing the dust of his journey, broken by the automobile trip across the mountains where the two railroads would some day meet, Karl reflected on the situation. A dual monarchy, one portion of it restless and revolutionary, was less desirable than the present peace and prosperity of Karnia. And unrest was contagious. He might find himself in a difficult position.

He glanced about his rooms. In one of them Prince Hubert had met his death. It was well enough for Mettlich to say the few could not speak for the many. It took but one man to do a murder, Karl reflected grimly.

But when he arrived for tea in the archducess' white drawing room he was urbane and smiling. He kissed the hand of the archducness and bent over Hedwig's with a flash of white teeth.

Then he saw Olga Loschek, and his smile stiffened. The countess came forward, curtsied, and as he extended his hand to her, touched it lightly with her lips. They were quite cold. For just an instant their eyes met.

It was, on the surface, an amiable and quiet tea party. Hedwig had taken up her position by a window, and was conspicuously silent. Behind her were the soft rings of silver against china, the countess' gay tones, Karl's suave ones, assuming gravity, as he inquired as to his majesty's health; the Archducness Annunciata pretending a solicitude she did not feel. And all forced, all artificial.

"Grandmother," Hedwig whispered from her window to the austere old bronze figure in the place, "was it like this with you, at first? Did you shiver when he touched your hand? And doesn't it matter, after a year?"

"Very feeble," said the archducness' voice, behind her, "but so brave—a lesson to us all."

"He has had a long and conspicuous career," Karl observed. "It is sad, but we must all come to it. I hope he will be able to see me."

"Hedwig!" said her mother, sharply, "your tea is getting cold."

Hedwig turned toward the room. Listlessness gave her an added dignity, a new charm. Karl's eyes flamed as he watched her. Even her coldness appealed to him. He had a feeling that the coldness was only a young girl's armor, that under it was a deeply passionate woman. The thought of seeing her come to deep, vibrant life in his arms thrilled him.

When he carried her tea to her, he bent over her. "Please!" he said. "Try to like me. I—"

"I'm sorry," Hedwig said quickly, "Mother has forgotten the lemon."

Karl smiled and, shrugging his shoulders, fetched the lemon. "Right, now?" he inquired. "And aren't we going to have a talk together?"

"If you wish it, I dare say we shall."

"Majesty," said Hilda, frowning into her teacup. "I see a marriage for you." She ignored her mother's scowl, and tilted her cup to examine it.

"A marriage!" Karl joined her, and peered with mock anxiety at the tea grounds. "Strange that my fate should be confined in so small a compass! A happy marriage? Which am I?"

"The long yellow leaf. Yes, it looks happy. But you may be rather shocked when I tell you."

"Shocked?"

"I think," said Hilda, grinning, "that you are going to marry me."

"Delightful!"

"And we are going to have—"

"Hilda!" cried the archducness fretfully, "to stop that nonsense and let us talk. I was trying to recall, this morning," she said to Karl, "when you last visited us." She knew it quite well, but she preferred having Karl think she had forgotten. "It was, I believe, just before Hubert—"

"Yes," said Karl gravely, "just before."

"Otto was a baby then."

"A very small child. I remember that I was afraid to handle him."

"He is a curious boy, old beyond his years. Rather a little prig, I think. He has an English governess, and she has made him quite a little woman."

Karl laughed, but Hedwig flushed.

"He is not that sort at all," she declared stoutly. "He is lonely and—and rather pathetic. The truth is that no one really cares for him, except—"

"Except Captain Larisch!" said the archducness smoothly. "You and he, Hedwig, have done your best by him, surely."

The bit of byplay was not lost on Karl—the sudden stiffening of Hedwig's back, Olga's narrowed eyes. Olga had been right, then. Trust her for knowing facts when they were disagreeable. His eyes became alert and watchful, hard, too, had any noticed. There were ways to deal with such a situation, of course. They were giving him this girl to secure their own safety, and she knew it. Had he not been so mad about her he might have pitied her, but he felt no pity, only a deep and resentful determination to get rid of Nikky, and then to warm her by his own fire. He might have to break her first. After that manner had many queens of Karnia come to the throne. He smiled behind his small mustache.

When tea was almost over, the crown prince was announced. He came in, rather nervously, with his hands thrust in his trousers pockets. He was very shiny with soap and water and his hair was still damp from parting. In his tailless black jacket, his long gray trousers, and his round Eton collar, he looked like a very anxious little schoolboy, and not royal at all.

Greetings over, and having requested that his tea be half milk, with four lumps of sugar, he carried his cup over beside Hedwig, and sat down on a chair. Followed a short silence, with the archducness busy with the tea things, Olga Loschek watching Karl, and Karl intently surveying the grown up prince. Finally it was Otto, who disliked a silence, broke it first.

"I've just taken off my winter flannels," he observed. "I feel very smooth and nice underneath."

Hilda giggled, but Hedwig reached over and stroked his arm. "Of course you do," she said gently.

"Nikky," continued Prince William Otto, stirring his tea, "does not wear any flannels. Miss Braithwaite thinks he is very careless."

King Karl's eyes gleamed with amusement. He saw the infuriated face of the archducness, and great forward the crown prince with earnestness.

"As a matter of fact," he said, "since you have mentioned the subject, I do not wear any either. Your Nikky and I seem more surprisingly to have the same tastes—about various things."

"Do you like dogs?" inquired the crown prince, much interested.

"Dogs! Why, yes. I have quite a number of dogs."

"I should think it would be nicer to have just one dog, and be very fond of it. But I suppose they would eat a great deal. Do you believe in love at first sight?"

"Otto!" said the archducness, extremely shocked.

He turned to her apologetically. "I read once, trying to find out how many things he and Nikky agreed about," he explained. "Nikky believes in love at first sight. He says it is the only real kind of love, because love isn't a thing you think out. You only feel it."

The archducness met Karl's eyes. "You see!" she said.

"But it is sound doctrine," Karl observed, bending forward and with a slanting glance at Hedwig. "I quite agree with him again. And this friend of yours, he thinks love is the only thing in the world, I dare say?"

"Well, he thinks a great deal of it. But he says that love of country comes first, before anything else."

The archducness glanced at Hedwig furiously. The girl had closed her eyes, and was sitting detached and pale. She would have liked to box her ears. Karl was no fool, and there was talk enough. He would hear it, of course.

"I will us about your pilgrimage, Otto," she suggested.

"Well, I went," said the crown prince reflectively, "We walked a long time, and it was very warm. I have quite a large blister, and the archbishop had to take his shoes off and walk in his stockings, because his feet burt. No one saw. It was on a country lane. But I'm afraid it didn't do very much good." He drew a long breath.

"No?" Karl inquired.

Suddenly the boy's chin quivered. He was terribly afraid he was going to cry, and took a large sip of tea, which cleared his voice.

"My grandfather is not any better," he said. "Perhaps some one else should have gone. I am not very good," he explained to Karl. "It ought to be a very good person. He is very sick."

"Perhaps," suggested Karl mockingly, with a glance at Hedwig, "they should have sent this 'Nikky' of yours."

Annunciata stirred restlessly. She considered this talk of Nikky in execrable taste.

"He is not particularly good."

"Oh, so he is not particularly good?"

"Well, he thinks he isn't. He says he doesn't find it easy to love his country more than anything in the world, for one thing. And he smokes a great many cigarettes."

"Another taste in common!" jeered Karl, in his smooth, carefully ironic tones.

Annunciata was in the last stages of irritation. There was no mistaking the sneer in Karl's voice. His smile was forced. She guessed that he had heard of Nikky Larisch before, that, indeed, he knew probably more than she did. But what, she wondered, was there to know? A great deal, if one could judge by Hedwig's face.

"I hope you are working hard at your lessons, Otto," she said, in the severe tone which Otto had learned that most people use when they refer to lessons.

"I'm afraid I'm not doing very well, Tante. But I've learned the 'Gettysburg address.' Shall I say it?"

"Heavens, no!" she protested. She had not the faintest idea what the "Gettysburg address" was. She suspected Mr. Gladstone.

The countess had relapsed into silence. A little back from the family circle, she had watched the whole scene stonily, and knowing Karl as only a woman who loves sincerely and long can know a man, she knew the inner workings of his mind. She saw anger in the very turn of his head and set of his jaw. But she saw more, jealousy, and was herself half mad with it.

She knew him well. She had herself, for years, held him by holding herself dear, by the very difficulty of attaining her. And now this indifferent, white-faced girl, who might be his, indeed, for the taking, but who would offer or promise no love, was rousing him to the instinct of possession by her very indifference. He had told her the truth, that night in the mountain inn. It was Hedwig he wanted, Hedwig herself, her heart, all of her. And, if she knew Karl, he would move heaven and earth to get the thing he wanted.

She surveyed the group. How little they knew what was in store for them! She, Olga Loschek, by the lifting of a finger, could turn their smug superiority into terror and despair, could ruin them and send them flying for shelter to the very ends of the earth.

But when she looked at the little crown prince, legs dangling, eating his plain bread and butter as only a hungry small boy can eat, she shivered. By what means must she do all this! By what unspeakable means!

* * * * *

Karl saw the king that evening, a short visit marked by extreme formality, and, on the king's part, by the keen and frank scrutiny of one who is near the end and fears nothing but the final moment. Karl found the meeting depressing and the king's eyes disconcerting.

"It will not be easy going for Otto," said the king, at the end of the short interview. "I should like to feel that his interests will be looked after, not only here, but by you and yours. We have a certain element here that is—troublesome."

And Karl, with Hedwig in his mind, had promised.

"His interests shall be mine, sir," he had said.

He had bent over the bed then, and raised the thin hand to his lips. The interview was over. In the anteroom the king's master of the horse, the chamberlain, and a few other gentlemen stood waiting, talking together in low tones. But the chancellor, who had gone in with Karl and then retired, stood by a window, with his arms folded over his chest, and waited. He put resolutely out of his mind the face of the dying man on his pillows, and thought only of this thing which he—Mettlich—had brought about. There was no yielding in his face or in his heart, no doubt of his course. He saw, instead of the room in which he was in place, a new and greater kingdom, anarchy held down by an iron-shod heel, peace and the fruits thereof, until out of very prosperity the people grew fat and content.

He saw a boy king, carefully taught, growing into his responsibilities until, big with the vision of the country's welfare, he should finally ascend the throne. He saw the river filled with ships, carrying merchandise over the world and returning with the wealth of the world. Great buildings, too, lifted their heads on his horizon, a dream city, with order for disorder, and citizens instead of inhabitants.

When at last he stirred and sighed, it was because his old friend, in his bed in the next room, would see nothing of all this, and that he himself would not hope for more than the beginning, before his time came also.

The first large dinner for months was given that night at the palace, to do King Karl all possible honor. The gold service which had been presented to the king by the czar of Russia was used. The anticipatory gloom of the court was laid aside, and jewels brought from vaults were worn for the first time in months. Uniforms of various sorts, but all gorgeous, touched fine shoulders, and came away, bearing white, powdery traces of the meeting. The greenhouses at the summer palace had been sacked for flowers and plants. The corridor from the great salon to the dining hall, always a dreary passage, had suddenly become a fairy path of early spring bloom. Even Annunciata, hung now with ropes of pearls, her hair dressed high for a tiara of diamonds, her cameos exchanged for pearls, looked royal. Proving conclusively that clutter, as to dress, is entirely a matter of value.

Miss Braithwaite, who had begun recently to think a palace the dreariest place in the world, and the most commonplace, found the preparations rather exciting. Being British she dearly loved the aristocracy, and shrugged her shoulders at any family which took up less than a page in the peurage. She resented deeply the intrusion of the commoner into British politics, and considered Lloyd George an upstart and an interloper.

That evening she took the crown prince to see the preparations for the festivities. The flowers appealed to him, and he asked for and secured a rose, which he held carefully. But the magnificence of the table only faintly impressed him, and when he heard that Nikky would not be present, he lost interest entirely. "Will they wheel my grandfather in in a chair?" he inquired.

"He is too ill," Miss Braithwaite said.

"He'll be rather lonely, when they're all at the party. You don't suppose I could go and sit with him, do you?" "It will be long after your bedtime."

Bedtime being the one rule which was never under and circumstances broken, he did not persist. To have insisted might have meant five marks off in Miss Braithwaite's book, and his record was very good that week. Together the elderly English woman and the boy went back to the school room.

The Countess Loschek, who had dressed with a heavy heart, was easily the most beautiful of the women that night. A little court paid tribute to her beauty, and bowed the deeper and flattered the more as she openly scorned and flouted them. She caught once a flicker of admiration in Karl's face, and although her head went high, her heart beat stormily under it.

Hedwig was like a flower that required the sun. Only her sun was happiness. She was in soft white chiffons, her hair and frock alike girlish and unpretentious. Her mother, coming into her dressing room, had eyed her with disfavor.

"You look like a schoolgirl," she said, and sent for rouge, and with her own royal hands applied it. Hedwig stood silent, and allowed her to have her way without protest. Had submitted, too, to a diamond pin in her hair, and a string of her mother's pearls.

"There," said Annunciata, standing off and surveying her, "you look less like a baby."

She did, indeed! It took Hedwig quite five minutes to wash the rouge

"There," Said Annunciata, "You Look Less Like a Baby."

off her face, and there was, one might as well confess, a moment when a part of the crown jewels of the kingdom lay in a corner of the room, whence a trembling maid salvaged them, and examined them for damage.

The Princess Hedwig appeared that evening without rouge, and was the only woman in the room thus unadorned. Also she wore her coming-out string of modest pearls and a slightly defiant, somewhat frightened, expression.

The dinner was endless, which was necessary, since nothing was to follow the conversation. There could, under the circumstances, be no dancing. And the talk at the table, through course after course, was somewhat heavy, a trembling and unsteady beacon fire of King Karl. There were two reasons for this: Karl's presence and his purpose—as yet unannounced, but surmised, and even known—and the situation in the city.

That was bad. The papers had been ordered to make no mention of the occurrence of the afternoon, but it was well known. There were many at the table who felt the whole attempt foolhardy, the setting of a match to inflammable material. There were others who resented Karl's presence in Livonia, and all that it implied. And there were two, too, among the guests, one or more who had but recently sat in less august and more awful company.

Beneath all the brilliance and chatter, the sparkle and gayety, there was, then, uneasiness, wretchedness, and even treachery. And outside the palace, held back by the guards, there still stood a part of the sullen crowd which had watched the arrival of the carriage and automobiles, had craned forward to catch a glimpse of uniform or brilliantly shrouded figure entering the palace, and muttered as it looked.

Dinner was over at last. They moved back to the salon, a vast and ungay place, hung with tapestries and gayly lighted. Here the semblance of gayety continued, and Karl, skillfully itself, spoke a few words to each of the guests. Then it was over. The guests left, the members of the council, each with a wife on his arm, frowsy, overdressed women most of them. The council was chosen for ability and not for birth. At last only the suite remained, and constraint vanished.

The family withdrew shortly after to a small salon off the large one. And there, at last, Karl cornered Hedwig and demanded speech.

"Where?" she asked, glancing around the crowded room.

"I shall have to leave that to you," he said. "Unless—there is a balcony."

"But do you think it is necessary?" "Why not?"

"Because what I have to say does not matter."

"It matters very much to me," he replied gravely.

Hedwig went first, slipping away quietly and unnoticed. Karl asked the archducness' permission to follow her and found her waiting there alone, rather desperately calm now, and with a tinge of excited color in her cheeks. Because he caged a great deal, and because, as kings go, he was neither hopelessly bad nor hard, his first words were kind and genuine, and almost brought her to tears.

"Poor little girl!" he said.

He had dropped the curtain behind him, and they were alone.

"Don't," said Hedwig; "I want to be very calm, and I am sorry for myself already."

"Then you think it is all very terrible?"

She did not reply, and he drew a chair for her to the rail. When she was seated, he took up his position beside her, one arm against a pillar.

"I wonder, Hedwig," he said, "if it is not terrible because it is new to you, and because you do not know me very well. Not," he added hastily, "that I think your knowing me well would be an advantage. I am not so Idotic. But you do not know me at all, and for a good many years I must have stood in the light of an enemy. It is not easy to readjust such things—witness the reception I had today!"

"Why must we talk about it?" Hedwig demanded, looking up at him suddenly with a flash of her old spirit. "It will not change anything."

"Perhaps not. Perhaps—yes. You see, I am not quite satisfied. I do not want you, unless you are willing. It would be a poor bargain for me, and a quite false."

A new turn, this, with a vengeance! Hedwig stared up with startled eyes. It was not enough to be sacrificed. And as she realized all that hung on the situation, the very life of the kingdom, perhaps the safety of her family, everything, she closed her eyes for fear he might see the right in them.

Karl bent over and took one of her cold hands between his two warm ones. "Little Hedwig," he said, "I want you to come willingly because—I care a great deal. I would like you to care, too. Don't you think you would, after a time?"

"After a time!" said Hedwig drearily. "That's what they all say. After a time it doesn't matter. Marriage is always the same—after a time."

"Why should marriage be always the same, after a time?" he inquired.

"This sort of marriage, without love."

"It is hardly that, is it? I love you."

"I wonder how much you love me."

Karl smiled. He was on his own ground here. The girlish question put him at ease. "Enough for us both, at first," he said. "After that—"

"But," said Hedwig desperately, "suppose I know I shall never care for you, the way you will want me to. You talk of being fair. I want to be fair to you. You have a right—" She checked herself abruptly. After all, he might have a right to know about Nikky Larisch. But there were others who had rights, too—Otto to his throne, her mother and Hilda and all the others, to safety, her grandfather to die in peace, the only gift she could give him.

"What I think you want to tell me, is something I already know," Karl said gravely. "Suppose I am willing to take that chance? Suppose I am vain enough, or fool enough, to think that I can make you forget certain things, certain people. What then?"

"I do not forget easily."

"But you would try?"

"I would try," said Hedwig, almost in a whisper.

Karl bent over and taking her hands, raised her to her feet.

"Darling," he said, and suddenly drew her to him. He covered her with hot kisses, her neck, her face, the soft angle below her ear. Then he held her

"Now," He Said, "Have You Forgotten?"

away from him triumphantly. "Now," he said, "have you forgotten?"

But Hedwig, scarlet with shame, faced him steadily. "No," she said.

FARMS MORE VALUABLE

When the Well Water Is Pure and Wholesome,

Price of Hogs at High Levels So Prepare to Rear Fall Litters of Pigs —Choose the Strongest and Healthiest Young Sows—Litters Should Be Farrowed Before Cold Weather.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

THE well is the usual source of the farm water supply, and a good well, that is, one which supplies plenty of pure fresh and wholesome water the year round is certainly one of the most essential and valuable assets of the farm. Without it no man could live there for long, to say nothing about bringing up a healthy family, or building up an efficient dairy herd. The well must be there first and last and all the time, and we cannot conceive of an intelligent man buying a farm without a good well if he intended to live on it and make it pay dividends.

Fortunately, most of Ontario's farms are well supplied with water, in fact it is a rare thing to find a farm where it could not be secured in sufficient quantities by drilling to reasonable depths. The supply, therefore, will probably never cause us any serious worry, but judging by a recent report on analysis of many well waters from this Province one seems justified in concluding that there is still need for education of the rural public in regard to the protection and care of the farm well. The following suggestions will be found helpful to any farmer desirous of making his water supply safe against possible underground and surface contamination.

The first step in the solution of this problem of purer water supply is the location of the well. This should be by all means on ground higher than any source of contamination such as barnyard, cesspool, or outside privy. If there should be no choice in location, and this cannot be done, then the well should be kept a considerable distance from such contaminations, at least 100 feet in clay, and 200 feet or more in sandy soils, and the cribbing and top of the well specially protected as detailed later against the entrance of any seepage and surface washings. In the second place the cribbing for at least 10 feet below the surface should be made impervious to water so that any contamination in solution reaching the well would have to pass down through this extra depth of soil before getting into the well, when in all probability it would be taken up by the soil and never reach the well water. This may be done in case of an old well by putting a wall of puddled clay 1 foot thick and 10 feet deep around the well cribbing, and in case of a newly-dug well, or recribbing an old one, by using large concrete tile for the cribbing and setting the joints thoroughly in rich cement. Before the tile are placed in the well the outsides should be washed with pure cement, plaster in order to fill up all pores and make the tile absolutely impervious to soil waters. Thirdly, the cribbing should be carried up at least one foot above the ground level and the soil banked up to the top of it to provide good surface drainage away from the well. Fourthly, the well should be provided with a strong and tight-fitting cover made of heavy plank or concrete so that it will always be safe for man and beast and proof against the entrance of dirt, small animals like frogs, etc. Even better still the pump may be placed over a shallow dry well to one side and the top of the real well made absolutely tight by a concrete cover in this case the well should be ventilated by putting a small iron pipe, with the exposed end turning downwards, through the top or cover. And, fifthly, the stock should not be allowed to tramp about close to the well.

What has been said refers chiefly to dug wells, but even the drilled or driven wells should be well drained and protected at the top, for otherwise contamination may work down along the well casing and reach the water, especially if the casing is not tightly driven into the rock below.

Attention to such matters of construction and protection of the farm well as I have detailed and an occasional pumping out and cleansing of the well with a little lime will assure a pure and wholesome water supply. —R. R. Graham, B.S.A., O. A. College, Guelph.

Early After-Harvest Cultivation.

"A stitch in time saves nine." In case of weeds prompt and thorough after-harvest cultivation prevents many thousands of weeds from developing seeds, and thus saves hours of tedious labor the succeeding season. Early after-harvest cultivation is one of the best ways to destroy annual and winter annual weeds, such as False Flax, Corn Cockle, Wild Buckwheat, Pigweed, Ball Mustard, Wormseed Mustard and Annual Sow Thistle. Plowing shallow not more than three or four inches deep immediately after harvest, and harrow and cultivate frequently. By the shallow plowing the weed seeds are kept near the surface and by the frequent stirring of the soil they are made to sprout, and having sprouted they are easily destroyed by further cultivation.—Dr. C. A. Zavitz, O. A. College, Guelph.

Avoid Having Pigs Crushed.

To prevent having pigs crushed in the farrowing pen, do not permit the sow to make a nest for the pigs, but keep it comparatively level. Around the sides of the pen, nail an eight-inch plank, horizontally, and about eight inches from the floor. By use of this contrivance many pigs will be saved from being mashed against the wall.

More Tomatoes.

A despatch from the Niagara district states: "Growers are once more going extensively into tomatoes, encouraged by the high prices paid by the canning factories. Last year 50 cents bushel was the general price, and some growers got even more, and this year 60 cents and higher will be paid.

Save Your Clover Seed.

Both the American and Canadian clover seed trade have practically no reserve stocks of clover seed being carried over for next season. On the Toledo market red clover seed for autumn delivery advanced during the last two weeks in May from $19.90 per bushel to $21.80.

This situation indicates that special attention should be given to all clover seed crops in Eastern Canada. Most of our clover seeds are usually produced in Western Ontario, but prospects are very poor there this season, as the new clover stands was badly damaged by the dry period of last summer.

In districts with good clover crops, early cutting of the red clover for hay will give the best chance of a seed crop. Weed producing seeds which are difficult of cleaning from the threshed clover seeds should be rogued from the standing seed crops.

Fertilizers.

Tests at Experimental Farm stations show that fertilizers have increased the yields of grain and vegetables from 25 per cent. to over 125 per cent. What is prospect this offers to the worn-out and ill-treated farms of the older farming districts of Canada. The 1917 report of the Board of Agriculture of Great Britain records that of the British farmers who took part in the greater production movement, forty per cent., in reporting to the board, referred to the service rendered by fertilizers.

PASTURES

Farmers Should Aim to Get Full Benefit of Grazing.

A prolific cause of the decline of pastures results from not stocking them properly. Farmers are frequently advised to graze their fields lightly if they wish to keep them permanently productive, the depleted western ranges being cited as glaring examples of what happens where overgrazing is permitted. Such advice is misleading for humid eastern conditions. It is poor farming to fail to realize the largest total gain per acre or the maximum gain per individual animal, or the highest possible production of milk, wool, pork, or mutton from the grazing areas without jeopardizing their future production.

Where heavy beef cattle are produced it is not practicable to graze too closely, as the animals will not make sufficient gains to sell profitably. But with young cattle or dairy cows, the risk would not be nearly so great, and the benefit derived from close grazing would far exceed the chance for loss. The extent and duration of the grazing is an individual matter for each farmer to decide, but in making this decision he should bear in mind that many of the unproductive and so-called rundown pastures in the best sections of the blue-grass region have resulted from too light rather than from too heavy grazing.

Grazing a pasture to capacity usually operates to prevent the development of woods, as well as to maintain a fine, even turf. The blue grass, red top, white clover, and other good pasture plants thrive and spread if kept closely grazed, while most weeds cannot live if their tops are cut off frequently. As a rule, in the average pasture the heavily grazed portions are comparatively free from weeds and possess a better sod than the area on which the grasses are too mature to be eaten by live stock, where the weeds usually run rampant. Furthermore, the character of the turf on a heavily grazed field will steadily improve, while on a lightly grazed area will deteriorate correspondingly, according to the results of extensive grazing experiments.

Garden Peas.

Garden peas are best grown on the flat in rows three feet apart. They very seldom cross, so that each plant is practically a pure line which enables the isolation of comparatively little difficulty. Plants containing the largest number of long pods are chosen, and peas from each are sown in a separate rows. Of course the more plants are chosen to start with the greater the chance of finding the extraordinary merit, but if fifty are used the first year, ten the second, two the third, and the best the fourth, it will be found that there will be quite an improvement over the initial stock.

At the Cap Rouge Experimental Station the isolation of a good strain of June garden pea was started in 1912, when the yield was at the rate of twenty-six bushels of green pods per acre; in 1915 the yield had risen to forty-two bushels, and in 1918 to seventy-eight. Though the least desirable varieties were yearly weeded out, leaving only the best, still this strain was the highest producer of the eight tried in 1918.

Farmers need not go to the trouble of isolating good strains, as this work is done at experimental farms, but they can start with a good variety and put small stakes near a few plants which show decided superiority, as long as these have no advantage in regard to space, light, manure or soil. The crop can be picked green, leaving only the chosen plants to mature pense, and the pods shelled by hand. This choice seed would be sown in next year, when the same work should be gone over again, and so on each year, as the good results obtained are soon lost when selection is stopped.

Pure-bred Sires.

The pure-bred sire is the salvation of the man with a herd of poor producing cows. Low production in dairy herds is the cause of large financial losses to the owners annually, and the aim of progressive dairymen is to increase the average production of their animals. This can be brought about by good feeding, careful selection and intelligent breeding.

For best results all three processes must work together — good feeding and care stimulate the cows to their maximum production; careful selection eliminates from the herd the animals which are not profitable under favorable conditions; but to permanently increase the production of the herd intelligent breeding is absolutely essential.

During the last eleven years an experiment has been in progress at Iowa State College to determine the ability of pure-bred sires to increase the production of scrub cows. They were mated to pure-bred sires of the same breed. Records are now available for two generations of grades, as well as for the original scrubs. All individuals received the same care and feed as the pure-bred animals within the herd, and the results obtained thoroughly vindicate the use of the pure-bred dairy sire.—A. C. McCandlish, Iowa State College.

Children Kill 1,300,000 Gophers.

The great gopher competition directed by the weeds and seed branch of the Saskatchewan Department of Agriculture is over. Twelve hundred and fourteen schools entered the contest, and reported 1,326,092 gophers destroyed. Last year about a thousand schools accounted for 880,000 gophers, while in 1917 some eight hundred schools reported, 550,000 gopher tails.

NEW BEADED BAGS

Conceits That Lend Daintiness to Milady's Costumes.

Smart shops that specialize in novelties are devoting much space to the display of new beaded bags and there is sufficient variety in their shape and coloring to make them intensely interesting. Everything that can be made with beads is exceedingly smart this season. Women who never thought that they would have the patience to attempt them are making beaded bags. Two pretty novelties are shown here. One is large affair in blue and tan beads sewed on in tiny squares. The bandle is entirely of blue beads. Each square measures one-fourth inch high by one-half inch wide and each square requires from 32 to 36 beads.

Many of the handsomest bags are so expensive that it is far more economical to make them at home. To develop a design in the beads them may be sewed singly, a back stitch taken with each bead. Another way is to string the beads on a strong thread, then couch down the string, taking stitches between the beads. Either method may be used with satisfaction and frequently the sewer imagines that she is making better progress if she strings the beads before sewing them onto the frame.

Miser's purses are very fashionable this year, and some beautiful designs are shown. The one illustrated is made of black silk tricolette embroidered in steel beads. One can work out a number of delightful color schemes with these bags.

NEW GRAY SILK SPORT SUIT

© Western Newspaper Union.

This is a gray silk sport suit of unusual quality. The material has a high sheen and is smartly made. Very plain is the front of the coat, and the back smartly gathered, sports two sashes from the collar, with black wool tassels. The skirt is snug, conforming with the season's latest models.

Novelty From Paris.

A genuine Paris novelty takes the form of a dainty evening frock in "chemise" form, of ivory white organdie muslin, embroidered with washing silver threads and worn over a fourreau of silver net. The extreme simplicity of the little dress lends it a most desirable cachet. Unfortunately this "simplicity" cannot be called inexpensive.

Keeps Doorknob Screws Tight.

Doorknob screws often work out and let the knob come off. This may be prevented by removing loose screws, covering them with glue and screwing them back into place.

Laundering Organdie.

Add two tablespoonfuls of prepared gum arabic water to a quart of lukewarm water and dip the organdie, after it has been dried, into this; roll the garment into a tight roll and allow to get partly dry; take an atomizer containing lukewarm water; with this atomize the outside of the roll, which will be drier than the inside, iron on the wrong side as far as possible.

PARASOLS ARE GAY

Feather Edge in Pointed Effect of Wavy Curling Tips.

Sunshades Different in Ways From Predecessors as to Materials of Which They Are Made.

The feather trimming which has adorned dancing frocks all winter will be seen during the summer gayly waving along the edges of parasols. One of the imported models of very dark blue silk has a Belgian blue feather edge running along in a pointed effect of wavy curling tips. Of course it is unusual enough to cause the most blase person to say, "Well, for goodness sake."

Still another model also of the deep blue which we call midnight has a narrow fringe of red uncurled ostrich and this somehow does not seem so startling as the curly feather for the reason that we have often seen fringe on parasols, and the uncurled ostrich closely resembles fringe.

Parasols this summer are different in many ways from their predecessors, not as to their main characteristics, for after all a parasol is a parasol and can only be of certain shapes, but as to the materials of which they are made. A very handsome one of finest black net is lined with soft black chiffon. On the outside a band of silver and black lace 12 inches deep goes entirely around the outside in a flat circle. This parasol is really beautiful and makes one wonder why we have never seen things like it before. The handles of all of these are of dark, handsome wood with no carving, and the ribs and tips are of white bone.

One seldom sees the long handles which were so fashionable some seasons ago, for the correct parasol of the moment both for rain and sun is rather short as to handle and shorter as to tip. The new silks impervious to any kind of weather are shown in lovely colors, so that it is possible to match any costume. The smartest of these little utility umbrellas have leather loops through the handles and by means of which they can be carried over the arm.

Velvet parasols are new enough to cause comment, designed perhaps for service with the newest of the sport coats, which are at this moment being made of velvet with collars and revers of white Angora wool. In fact almost every material which has never been used before is appearing in parasols this season—challis, organdie, cretonne and linene, though of course the latter two materials have been used year after year.

Haig Is Good Golf Driver.

Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig and Lady Haig were on the St. Andrew's links recently and engaged in an interesting foursome over the Old Course. Sir Douglas and Gen. Kiggell played against Lady Haig and Andrew Kirkaldy, professional to the Royal and Ancient Club. The latter couple won by two holes after a close contest. Andrew Kirkaldy says that Lady Haig is a good golfer and that Sir Douglas' short game is not so good as his driving, which is excellent.

Ancient Furnace Discovered.

A lady member of the Cumberland and Westmoreland Antiquarian Society of England has had the good fortune to discover what is believed to be a Roman bloomery, or ancient smelting furnace. Her attention was drawn to the place by the work of moles, which recently exposed some of the remains, and again later by the burning of the whins formerly concealing the hearth and other features of the bloomery, near Forest How.

By some exploration with a spade, she traced the foundations of a large hearth, twelve yards in diameter, and a number of heaps of cinders, slag and ore; and she also turned up specimens of Roman tiles, with pottery, slag and hematite. The size of the hearth of the Forest How bloomery marks it as quite different from the ordinary north-country mediaeval iron furnaces, which run from seven to nine or ten feet in diameter, for the one last found is twelve yards across. This site appears to be worth further explorations and probably money for that purpose will be found.

An Increase In Wheat Area.

In the first bulletin issued this season the Northwest Grain Dealers' Association estimates the area in wheat in the three Prairie Provinces at 16,085,000 acres, an increase of 3.6 per cent. over the wheat area last year. This is somewhat in contradiction of other earlier estimates, all of which allowed for a slight decrease in the wheat acreage and an increase in the sowing of oats and flax.

Alcohol is Poison

Doctors Say It Is a Menace in Any and All Forms

FIVE ounces of alcohol will kill a full-grown healthy man within ten hours. Taken in smaller but repeated doses alcohol lets him live longer but gets him in the end. All alcoholic beverages are poison, slow or swift.

Medical science has established that alcohol is a poison and a narcotic chemically related to ether and chloroform, and not a stimulant. A man was once brought out of ether who had taken eight ounces, and a man was once brought out of chloroform who had taken 22½ ounces, but no man ever revived who swallowed five ounces of alcohol at a single dose. The unconsciousness or coma produced by alcohol if not broken within ten or twelve hours is followed by practically certain death.

Alcohol as medicine has been expelled from the American Pharmacopoeia by the American Medical Association.

2.51% Alcohol in Beer Makes it Poison

THE beer of the ballot contains 2.51% alcohol by weight—over twice as strong as the beer of the Ontario Temperance Act (2.50 Proof Spirits). The Beer of the Ballot is intoxicating. Three glasses of the Beer of the Ballot contains as much alcohol as a glass of whiskey.

When you are asked are you in favor of beer containing 2.51% alcohol by weight—in shops, bars, or anywhere else, vote

"No!"—Four Times—"No!"

Save yourself, save your family, save your country for the destiny God intended unhandicapped by "booze."

Be careful—mark your ballot after each question with an X under the column headed "No," or your vote will be lost to Temperance.
